

Is There A Health Care Conspiracy ?

So Many People Think So

I believe you can agree that there appears to be a significant financial consideration in regard to health care in this country?

There are significant powerful factors which control the methodologies which are favored in this country?

The basis I feel that you can agree on, it is financial !

It does not seem to be a coincidence what services are covered by state, federal and insurance benefits.

Recently, I presented a seminar in Utah on the musculoskeletal system. While I was gathering facts about this subject, this statistic jumped right out at me. $ 208,000,000,000.00 has been spent on hip and knee replacements. I calculated this awesome sum equated to the fact that I could take care of the whole world for 10 years.

It is not that I am chastising these procedures. It is that I am totally amazed that NOTHING is being done to address the obvious reason why these procedure are necessary. The hip replacements , for an example, are predominately cause by osteoporosis - a condition where the bone is so brittle that it just cannot support the weight of the body.

The nutritional answer could possibly be far more effective and a lot less painful. After all these bones are not regenerating themselves. Another prfound concern is one's dietary intake.

Genetic you say ? Time for another newsletter!

In contrast, emergency medical procedures sometimes perform miracles and I think that the doctors who perform them are not paid enough.

For a very long while I felt it was a conspiracy to put the alternative practices out of business. Recently, I had lunch with a gentleman who is involved in a corporation whose financial viability is based on consumer utilization of their products and services.

I told him how I felt and he just chuckled and finally stated, " listen Marc it is just business and survival of the business and well welfare of the stockholders." Increase in market share, it a business angle.

It is unfortunate to realize that the morality, integrity, viability and efficacy may not be what is considered most essential.

So I am just a little less cynical today.

There is a war going on between the two medical philosophies. Do we treat symptoms or do we help heal the body so symptoms heal because we have addressed the reason for their existence.

We are winning people over by the thousands every year maybe hundreds of thousands. Sometimes it is a hard won lesson through experience with side effects or adverse reaction.

Hope to see ya soon

I believe you can agree that there appears to be a significant financial consideration in regard to health care in this country. There are powerful factors which control the methodologies in health care which are favored in this country. The financial remuneration given by state, federal and insurance benefits favors treatments which best serve "another" master.

It is unfortunate to realize that the morality, integrity and viability are not what is most considered in this equation.

But we are speaking of people's lives !
